Eagle Mountain City Announces RAP Tax Proposal for November 2025 Ballot

EAGLE MOUNTAIN, Utah (June 25, 2025) – Eagle Mountain City is preparing to place a Recreation, Arts, and Parks (RAP) Tax proposal on the November 2025 ballot, where residents can vote to enact a 0.1% local sales tax (equal to one cent for every 10 dollars spent within city limits) to support community-focused projects and programs.

In anticipation of this potential ballot measure, Eagle Mountain City now offers key information and educational resources on its website. Residents can learn how the RAP Tax supports community projects and ensures continued investment in the amenities that make Eagle Mountain a great place to live, without drawing resources away from other essential services.

“This is about giving residents a choice,” said Tyler Maffitt, Eagle Mountain City Communications Manager. “As Eagle Mountain evolves, it’s important to plan following our values and allow our community to invest in the programs and outdoor spaces that make life better here. Our role is to make sure the public has access to accurate, transparent information before the vote.”

If approved by voters, the RAP Tax would generate dedicated funding for public recreation, arts, and parks initiatives in Eagle Mountain. All funds would remain local and contribute toward amenities such as trails, splash pads, youth sports programs, cultural events, and city-approved grants for nonprofit partners.

The proposed RAP Tax would appear on the November 2025 ballot and, if passed, would last for ten years before requiring voter renewal. Similar sales tax measures are already in place in more than 16 cities across Utah County.

Additional educational materials, frequently asked questions, and updates will be available through Eagle Mountain City’s official newsroom and social media channels throughout the coming months. The City anticipates a formal vote to potentially place the proposal on the ballot by August.
